

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The action of Sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every morning and evening.

It was the universal remedy for all "blood purifiers," tetter, eczema, and skin diseases, and it was the only remedy for all these ailments without resort to medicine.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and it was not until the discovery of the medicinal use of the element obtained from the Sulphur Springs of the West that a more effective and palatable remedy was found.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from the Sulphur Springs of the West.

It is a fact that the medicinal use of sulphur is a highly concentrated, effective form.

Many people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they doted us with sulphur and molasses every morning and evening, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Sulphur is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and for that reason they are the natural blood purifier and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from the Sulphur Springs of the West was far more effective than any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Sulphur."

Patients suffering from a cold, cough, and even deep-seated catarrhes, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days after the use of Stuart's Calcium Sulphur.

WOMAN POSES AS FRONTIERSMAN FOR OVER QUARTER OF A CENTURY

Kate Maher, Disguised as a Man, Lives Life of Freighter, Stage Driver, Prospector, Miner, Gambler, Cowpuncher and Indian Scout on the Western Plains and in the Rocky Mountains for a Livelihood.

DISAPPEARS IN SHAME WHEN HER SEX IS FINALLY REVEALED

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Camps, Wyo., Nov. 24.—In humiliation and shame at the sudden revelation to her friends and associates that she was a woman, Kate Maher, who for more than a quarter of a century, in the guise of a man, lived the wild, free, strenuous life of a freighter, cowboy, scout, gold-seeker and stage driver, has disappeared from the haunts in the West that have known her so long and will doubtless never again be seen in the region wherein she spent the greater part of her singularly romantic life.

It is only occasionally nowadays that a character of the type that gave picturesqueness and distinction to the West in the early days is to be met with. Such a character was this woman, who for years lived, worked, ate, drank, smoked and gambled with men and was believed by her friends and associates to be a man until, recently, her sex was accidentally revealed and she suddenly dropped out of sight.

Not since the days when "Wild Bill" had his last sleep on a hill-top overlooking Deadwood, was at the periphery of his glory when "Deadwood Dick," who is now an unassuming workman in plain blue overalls in the Northwestern Plains, was at the head of the "shotgun men" who guarded the Wells Fargo express treasure from the Black Hills to civilization; not since the days when lawlessness ran riot and crime reigned supreme in the West, has there been a woman of such a type. She was a woman of the type that gave picturesqueness and distinction to the West in the early days is to be met with. Such a character was this woman, who for years lived, worked, ate, drank, smoked and gambled with men and was believed by her friends and associates to be a man until, recently, her sex was accidentally revealed and she suddenly dropped out of sight.

EARLY HISTORY. Kate Maher was the only child of poor Irish parents. When her father and mother immigrated to this country she was a little bright-eyed auburn-haired girl of 8. The family remained in New York until the husband and father had saved enough money to take him, his wife and child, on to Pittsburgh. He remained in Pittsburgh only long enough to get together enough money to take them on to Cleveland, and he remained in Cleveland only so long as was necessary to save enough money to take them on to Dubuque. He had relatives in Dubuque, and there he remained several years. The daughter went to school in Dubuque and laid the foundation for an education that enabled her, when in later years she was left to shift for herself, to teach a country school on the Western border.

Kate's mother died when the family was on its way in a prairie schooner from Dubuque to Omaha. On her arrival in Omaha the father joined a freight outfit bound for Denver and took his motherless child with him on the long journey across the plains. He placed her in the home and school of a family out West and arranged for her to re-enter school, while he continued to front across the plains. A few years later he was killed and scalped in a brush with Indians out in Western Nebraska. Kate's mother died when the family was on its way in a prairie schooner from Dubuque to Omaha. Women had a hard time in the West. Men were more fortunate. Kate Maher said this to herself, and she asked herself the question, "Why should I go on suffering for the sake of a man who has left me?" She decided to make a man of herself. She took a man's name, changed her name to Kate Maher, and she began to live the life of a man. one guise or another she drifted through the West for half a natural lifetime, but neither one place nor one set of friends ever knew her for long. So skillfully did she conceal her identity that scarce any two places where she has lived know her by the same name or under the same guise. But wherever she has been there she has always been "on the square."

COLOR AND ROMANCE. Few lives, whether of men or women, have been so rich in color and romance, so crowded with thrilling adventures and exciting experiences as the life of this woman of the plains and mountains of the West. Once in a brush with Indians when she was freighting between the Missouri river and the Rocky Mountains she was shot in the abdomen and narrowly escaped death. A short time after her recovery from her wound she was taken prisoner by a band of Indians and given up for lost by the other members of the freighting outfit to which she belonged. One dark night, however, she contrived to elude the vigilance of her red-skinned captors and, mounting one of the fastest ponies, made her escape under cover of darkness and in a few days rejoined her companions.

On another occasion, up near the Black Hills, she was singled out and challenged to mortal combat by a young Indian. He was eager to win his spurs. He regarded the young paleface as a crack shot of the plains and he was determined to win that if he could get the scalp of so worthy a foe his fame would be secure. The young woman, however, was not to be so easily won. She was a freighting outfit and she was determined to win that if he could get the scalp of so worthy a foe his fame would be secure. STAGE ROBBERIES. Stage robberies were of frequent occurrence on the border in those days, and the occupation of a stage driver was attended with great hardship and danger, but this woman was not deterred. She was a woman of the type that gave picturesqueness and distinction to the West in the early days is to be met with. LETSON BALLIETT SENTENCED FOR PERPETRATING FRAUDS.
Man Who Worked White Swan Mine Scheme Pays $300 and Goes to Jail.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 25.—Letson Balliett, who pleaded guilty to charges preferred by the Government of using the United States mails with intent to promote a gigantic mine swindle, was today sentenced to three months in the county jail and to pay a fine of $300.

During a former trial of the case it developed that Balliett wrongfully received from the sale of worthless White Swan gold mine stock, the mine being located near Des Moines, the sum of $10,000.

He was tried and convicted, carried his case to the Superior Court of Appeals and was granted a new trial. Upon a promise of leniency he pleaded guilty the second time, and threw himself on the mercy of the court.

Balliett is said to have spent most of his fortune in fighting the case.
